TV Extra. The long-term prognosis in survivors of acute myocardial infarction who have had AV block is related primarily to the extent of myocardial injury and the character of intraventricular conduction disturbances, rather than to the AV block per se 10 - Patients with acute myocardial infarction who have intraventricular conduction defects, with the exception of isolated left anterior hemi-block, have an unfavorable short- and long-term prognosis and increased incidence of sudden death 10 - This unfavorable prognosis is not necessarily due to the development of high grade AV block, although the incidence of such block is higher in postinfarction patients with abnormal intraventricular conduction 12 Unlike some other indications for permanent pacing, the criteria in patients with myocardial infarction and AV block do not necessarily depend on the presence of symptoms.
